Notes

B. C.: Have you ever thought you might have some internal trouble that causes the puffy condition under your eyes and the sallow complexion? I would advise you to consult a physician. Water is a good complexion clearer. I also advise the juice of a lemon unsweetened taken in a glass of cool water or a teaspoonful of olive oil taken a half hour before breakfist. Bathe your eyes each morning with a good eye wash, and rub gently underneath them with cold water. Find out the cause of the trouble and cure it, then the puffy condition will disappear.

The Treatment.

The disease is conveyed by clothing, towels, bedding, personal or toilet articles and direct contact. One case is enough to keep any family busy. Prevention consists in baking or boiling every possible article which has been in contact with the affected individual.

Synopsis of preceding chapters: The trey of hearts is the death sign used by Seneca Trine in the private war waged by him through his daughter. Judith, against Alan Law, whose fathernow dead, Trine blamed for the accident that made him a crippie for life Law and Rose, Judith's twin sister, love each other, and Rose fleets to his assistance. Judith's life is saved by Alan, and she falls in love with him, but, seorned by him, she pursues the lovers implacably, Surviving many desperate attempts on his life, Alan learns that Rose is being taken West by her father, and that his friend, from Barcus, proposes to go on the same train, disguised as a colored porter. He follows and rescues Rose and Harcus. Judith, after wrecking the train on which the three are traveling, Joins her father's party, which is held up by a bandit, whom Trine employs to kill Alan, sending with him, Judith and Marrophat, one of his agents. But Judith deserts the two men and takes the trail alone, followed by the bandit, who captures and binds her to the back of a horse. Alan kills the bandit, and starts to the rescue of Judith. Meanwhile the bandit's friends find his body and swear vengeance. Alan finds Judith in the desert, unharmed by a terrific storm. He again repulses her advances and leaves her, but she follows and finds him insensible from a fall. When he recovers, they start out in the desert, where they are overtaken by three intent in a motor, whom Judith halts at the point of a revoiver.

CHAPTER LXXXIII.-THE FATHER. The three who had alighted obeyed without a moment's hesitation: her father's creatures, they knew the daughter's temper far too well to dream of opposing her will.

In the six hands that were silhonetted against the headlights' radiance, three revolvers glimmered; but at her command all three dropped harmlessly to the eath to the eath.

Then, sharply, "Stand back two paces!" she required. They humored unanimously.

Darting forward, she picked up and pocketed the three weapons, then with one of her own singled out the men she named.

"Now, Marrophat—and you, Hicks—pick Mr. Law up and carry him into the car. And treat him gently, mind! If one of you lits a finger to harm him, that one shall answer to me."

Still none ventured to dispute her. The two men designated, without a sign of disinclination, stepped forward. One lifted Alan Law by the shoulders: the other took his legs. Between them they bore him with every care toward the motor car.

But now as second will manifested itself. The man in the rear seat lifted up a weirdly sonorous voice: "Stop!" he cried. "Stop this nonsense! Drop that man! Judith, I command you-"

"Be silent!" the girl cut in sharply. I command here-If it's necessary to ell you."

There was a pause of astonishment. Then the old man broke out in exas-peration that threatened to wax into fury: "Judith! What do you mean by this? Has it indeed come to this that my own daughter defles me
